

Word from the President

Dear All,

We all have suffered the restrictions due to the covid pandemic.

A lot of dojos were forced to close or were trying to survive by means of zoom, skype or other use of the media.

I sincerely hope the majority has survived as communication with our members was poor.

As well as HQ as the members did not feel to keep communication intact, which the Board found understandable.

I myself was out of the office due to personal issues, so I kept communication on a very low profile. My bad and I am sorry.

Back to business is the aim with new ideas and energy.

Unfortunately, we had to postpone the World Championships in Ukraine to be held in June this year.

We all know the awful reason and I like to express our support to our Friends in Ukraine. Our thoughts and prayers are with you.

Although the WC have been postponed does not necessarily say that the event is cancelled in total. We are now looking for new locations and dates.

So members we expect your input in this matter. Do not hesitate to come with ideas. E.g. UK and the Netherlands are serious options.

I mentioned UK, as an old student, not in age, has made serious contact again. His name is Steven Edwards and I know him since he was a young kid of 15 years.

Steven has practiced with my sons, competed with my sons and was even a part sometimes of the Dutch kata and kumite team.

I personally see him as my UK son and I have treated him as such. Steven finally wants to be a part of the WJKA. I say finally as it was always my aim in the beginning to get him involved in the WJKA as an assistant Chief Instructor. I am talking about the founding time of the WJKA with sensei Sidoli. Steven is still a student of sensei Sidoli, however his interest was always with the WJKA and his karate Dad, being me.

I like to introduce Steven as a WJKA Instructor and the representative of the WJKA in the UK. Please welcome him.

Now covid is almost over and travelling is more and more allowed, I have prepared myself to start doing courses on invitation.

I am sure that all our Board members, assistant Chief Instructors are prepared to be invited.

I am not pushing to be invited, however the WJKA is not very keen on inviting its experienced Instructors. Be aware, I am 72 yrs this year and I humbly say that even I do not know it all.

Until 10th dan, posthume, you learn every day. After obtained 10th, the learning period is over. In that case people will say you are experienced. Please think about that.

We ask you to send in all your schedules for the year. It seems that the WJKA agenda is completely empty as we do not receive any feedback from our members.

We expect nothing from the members we politely ask our members. No force, no pushing just equal people that have a main goal in karate.

Staying away and not communicating with HQ is the certain death of the WJKA.

To help you in making the right decision, I humbly but with proud and without going in detail can share this with you All:

In the past year Karate has saved my live as well as mentally, physically and medically.

Your Karate protects you and your Family in many ways. Not only mentally, physically or medical but also through your Karate family.

Thank you All for being as a, hopefully in the future, WJKA Karate Family.

With Respect

Jan Knobel
President WJKA

Leveraging a Life time's worth of Work Experience

By Andries Pruim - Canada

After 38 years in the corporate world, I was ready to retire from this highly stressful environment of business and finance. I was employed as a Commercial Lender for an International Bank for many years as well as a Senior Business Consultant for a huge Telecommunications firm for the last decade and a half of my career.

While not my ideal career, especially considering the stressful and competitive business atmosphere, it did provide me with a wealth of business experience and something I now hope to leverage in my second (or post retirement) career.

As most people who work in high stress careers, you need something to offset this strain and for me it was my Karate. I started training in Shotokan Karate in Victoria, B.C. (Canada) when I was only 13 years old. I am now 62 and have experienced a life time's worth of Budo over these many years.

While I started my Karate training with a non-affiliated instructor, the Shotokan I was taught, as I later found out in Japan, was of high quality. Nevertheless, after 20 years of somewhat isolated training, I decided to accept an invitation to attend a Budo Seminar being held at the International Budo University (IBU) in Katsuura, Japan.

It was here where I first met the incredible Shotokan Master, Hirokazu Kanazawa. I was enthralled watching the late Kanazawa Soke and his leading student perform an unbelievable demonstration. I immediately starting training with Soke as these Budo Seminars allowed us to train with a number of Budo Masters. That was in 1991 and I still train with the Kanazawa Honbu Dojo instructors to this day. I usually try to get over to Japan every couple of years, but COVID has put a damper on any travel lately, as it has on almost all aspects of our lives, including our Martial Arts business.

Of course, I was still fully involved with my Banking career at that time so after going to Japan and experiencing some of the finest Shotokan Instructors in the world, when I returned to Canada, I decided to seek out similar quality mentors locally and is when I started training with Hanshi Don Owens Shihan in the mid 1990's. I soon altered my working career and was hired as a senior Business Consultant with a Telecommunications firm where I developed and updated business processes for a team of highly technical software developers. It was after a decade and a half of working within the IT Industry where I felt that 38 years of corporate life was enough and decide to take some time off.

During this time, I started to closely analyze the Martial Arts Industry and actually travelled to Las Vegas on a number of occasions to attend a sizable (and annual) Martial Arts Business Convention. In my last position in the corporate world, I was part of a department which was called Professional Services where we provided Project Manager, Business Analyst and Software Developer services. It wasn't a stretch to expand on this premise and call my new business "Martial Arts Professional Services (MAPS) where we provide similar but expanded list of services to the Martial Arts Industry.

Leveraging both Financial and Business experience, together with the fact that I ran two separate full-time Karate studios while working full time at my "Day Job", we have tried to assist several Martial Arts school owners in professionalizing their business. This is because when a dedicated Martial Artist wishes to turn their passion into a profitable career, they must be ready to treat their new school first and foremost as a business!

🚩 Today's Martial Arts Industry

The Martial Arts as we know it today is considerably different from what was being taught as little as 40 years ago, including the method on how the Martial Arts is imparted to the new generation of enthusiasts.

In fact, up until the mid-Eighties, there was not a true Martial Arts “Industry”, with most schools being of the “hobbyist” variety. It was the generation of Karate Kid movie fans that eventually led to the Martial Arts Business becoming an actual Industry. When this happened it also allowed the industry to start tapping into the traditional Financial Resources as other well-established industries are able to.

When I first started Commercial Lending in a Major International Bank, there was little appetite for financing of any Martial Arts facility unless it was attached to a well-known Fitness Centre and even then, the focus was on the Fitness Industry more so than the Martial Arts Industry.

Before the onset of the COVID pandemic, there was a sizable push in the Martial Arts Industry to bring the business of running a school into the 21st century. While our motives as Martial Artists may be altruistic due to the uniqueness of the Service (or Product) we provide to the consumer, we must remember that if we are going to make a livelihood from this endeavor, then you have to run your school like a traditional business.

When I was a Commercial Lender, I would review new Business Plans all the time and Martial Arts businesses were no different. I would review their Revenues streams and expenses as well as the Management ability of the School Owner. Initially most Owners of these business were what we called hobbyists as we felt they were not serious enough with their business side to make a profit. Fortunately, that has changed over the years, with most School Owners following a more professional process when operating their business. This includes getting knowledgeable about how other similar industries (like the Fitness Industry) become successful, as well as learning more about those larger organizations like the WJKA and business focused consulting firms like my company MAPS Advisors. In fact, in America there are a sizable number of Martial Arts Business Associations (e.g.: MAIA, Kovar Systems, MATA, etc.) who have designed very successful systems that they are now disseminating across the industry ... with substantial success.

This is where you as a Martial Artist must make a decision if you are looking to leverage your Budo in order to make a decent living or are you only going to be a hobbyist who uses your Martial Arts school as a “side hustle” but still needing a second (or 3rd) job in order to provide properly for your family. When examining the Business Model of some of the more successful Martial Arts schools, there is a similar strategy and it’s based more on the business side as opposed to the style of the Martial Arts being taught.

When you as a Martial Artist see your Karate (or MMA, Tae Kwon Do, etc.) as the service you are trying to sell to the general public, you are on your way to developing a business plan that could provide you with a successful and profitable career. In fact, you should develop an actual Business Plan similar to if you were trying to sell your idea to a Banker or to Investors.

This means, you need to fully review every step of your school processes, from teaching to getting new students to taking care of the administrative side of the business. This is where a good consultant or mentor can provide value as it is always best to have a fresh set of eyes reviewing your entire operation. While every school is unique, the similarities are also prevalent so it’s best to keep an open mind when reviewing your existing processes.

For example, the way you have taught your Martial Arts is probably similar to how you were taught and even how your instructor was taught. Unfortunately (or fortunately in some cases), this is not acceptable in today's less tolerant society. For this reason, you must update every aspect of your curriculum including how you treat your students. We at MAPS Advisors have created a sample Martial Arts Curriculum Strategies Blog which doesn't rely on a certain Martial Art or even Karate style, but rather the demographic that you are teaching. In other words, you don't have to change what you are teaching but you may need to change how you teach it.

Another example is Risk Management. With our society becoming more litigious with each passing year, you must learn how to manage risk and in turn prevent any activity that could lead to lawsuits and financial damage to your business. In order to counteract these safety concerns, you should carefully review all of your business risk areas. Again, we here at MAPS Advisors have put together a synopsis of factors that you should be implementing into your day-to-day operations. Our Martial Arts Safety Governance whitepaper lists all of the areas of concern that you need to take into consideration when operating a Martial Arts school in today's business climate.

As you can see from the few examples I have described above, if you truly wish to start your own fulltime school, you need to first and foremost look at your operations, your staffing, your student management systems, your Marketing requirements and even how you use your Social Media platforms, through the lens of a businessperson first and as a Martial Artist second.

In other words, you could be the greatest instructor in your city, but without students you will never get your message across. If you don't have the experience to start up on your own, then look to leveraged the myriad of assistance available, either on-line (free ... but time consuming) or hire the services of a Coaching or Consulting firm. Your career could depend on it!!

Karate Training Tips Preventing Injury

By J.S. Copeland – USA

Wouldn't it be great if someone had taken you aside as a child or young adult and actually taught you all of the things you would need to know to prevent many of the martial arts and other injuries you have sustained over the years? Think of all the people you know who can no longer participate fully in their chosen activities due to bad knees, hips, backs, etc.

What if someone had taught you how to best condition your joints to minimize injuries? What if they had taught you that hopping from a squatting position weakened your anterior cruciate ligament causing instability of the knee and requiring surgery? How nice it would be if your first sensei had medical knowledge of anatomy and sports medicine and could have given you the tools to keep your body in the best possible condition through your life.

For those of you who are past 50, there is still the potential to improve, but many conditions by this time of life are not totally reversible. We can't return to the shape we were at 21, but there are things we can do that may slow the process of degeneration. For the younger students, you can do quite a lot for yourselves , not by training more, but by training smart. Since we have limited space , I will give you some of my “Pearls of Wisdom” , based on my karate training and on my experience as a chiropractor treating athletes for the past 44 years.

Pearls of Wisdom

Nutrition:

Minimize your intake of drinks such as carbonated beverages, coffee, tea, and alcohol. Take antioxidant vitamins daily, such as Vitamins C, E, and A, as these are our cell protectors and prevent premature breakdown of all of the cells of the body. Massive doses are not necessary, just regular intake. Remember the stories of British Sailors in the days of sailing ships? Many men on board these ships developed Scurvy, a condition associated with a lack of Vitamin C. They found if they ate citrus fruit , they cured the Scurvy. Since limes were the fruit they relied on and these have Vitamin C, they had made an amazing discovery. This vitamin is necessary for the body’s production of a protein called Collagen, that holds the cells of all our connective tissue (skin, muscle, ligaments, tendons and bones) together. If you over exert your body day in and day out, you need such nutritional support to help keep your connective tissues strong.

Cross training:

This is imperative if you want to reduce the possibilities of soft tissue injuries. Rather than train in karate every single day, you should skip a day every few days and do some activity that is completely different. Examples: Swimming, weight lifting, running, biking. Instructors, change your workout routines each month to emphasize different skills.

Martial Arts Training

Training as we age:

When we are young and are strong and fit, we can’t relate to those older karate practitioners who are 30 or 40 years older and seem to have become more susceptible to injury and illness. Many of these changes are not preventable, but many are if we train smart while we are young. We will list some activities of training, including some of those previously mentioned that should be left out of training.

1. Makiwara training in children’s classes. Years ago, it was believed that no harm would come of this conditioning and training procedure, but we know now from x-ray studies, that we were wrong. It is just that some people will be affected more than others. Osteo-arthritis is the main consequence later in life. In children, growth plates on the ends of certain bones can be damaged causing a lack of growth of those bones.
2. Excessive kicking hard objects with the shin or instep (top of foot). I have seen x-rays of karate students showing evidence of fractures of many of the bones of the feet as well as broken bones that would not heal and degenerated further causing the student to be unable to train again ever. I have also seen constant trauma to the shin bone end up causing blood clots. While clots may seem unimportant to young students, but they can result in stroke or death.

3. Poor diet, excessive intake of sugars, fats can impact our ability to train and our overall health.
4. Excess alcohol consumption, weakens the entire body and can predispose the body to physical problems later in life.

Karate Training Over 40:

This is the time to begin modifying our training. This is the time to add more variety into our training. Less time standing in our basic stances performing basic techniques for hours and more time in developing movement and practical application of all we have learned over the years. This does not mean we should neglect basics, but spending quality time learning what comes after basics.

Training Techniques to Avoid or Limit:

(For adults) Deep knee bends, squatting on the toes.

(Children): Punching makiwara, knuckle push ups on hard floor, over stretching, spending too much time in any specific stance (can cause stress on ligaments, tendons and the joints themselves). Avoid deep stances in all children under 12 to 14 years of age.

Excessively deep stances can be harmful to all ages.

Below is an example of a stance that will ultimately cause damage to the knees and other joints:

In this photo, we see a front stance with the front knee too far in front of the toes. This will later cause excessive wear on the knee. While this practitioner is still young, he will likely begin to feel the results of his deep stances in another 10 to 15 years. Best position for the knees in this stance would be directly over the first joint of the large toe.

Here are pictures of good and bad stances . This is something that should be part of all students file or notebook.
